Fidalgo Bay dredging, Cap Sante in the background. A great quantity of wood debris and pilings have been dredged.

Environmental cleanup underway on land and bay

In addition to upland work, environmental cleanup at the former Scott Paper mill site has now extended into Fidalgo Bay.

Pacific Pile and Marine of Seattle, the company that recently dredged a basin at Dakota Creek Industries, will conduct an environmental dredge in waters off the shoreline near Seafarers' Memorial Park.

Phase 2 of the cleanup project involves removal of contaminated soil and objects such as pilings and bricks. On shore, approximately two acres of intertidal beach area will be restored with clean sand, gravel and beach cobble.

PROJECT ACCOLADES: NW Career & Technology Academy Executive Director Donneta Spath credited numerous organizations and individuals for their commitment to realizing the dream of a marine technology center in Anacortes.

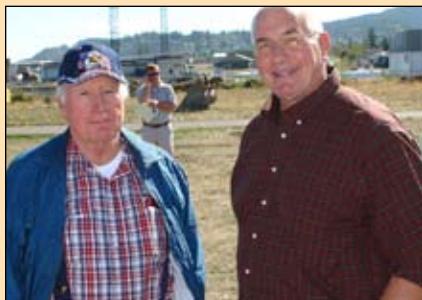

Work begins on marine technology center

It was a "who's who" gathering of education, government and marine trades leaders on September 17 for a groundbreaking ceremony at the future site of the Anacortes Marine Technology Center.

Representatives at the event included several school superintendents as well as Skagit Valley College administrators. State Rep. Dave Quall, who led the campaign for state funding of the project, extended thanks to all who partnered to make the center a reality.

The facility, scheduled to open in September 2010, is located on "R" Avenue property made available by the Port of Anacortes. The center will include four primary labs, a central project area and a covered outside work area.

Scenes from NCTA Groundbreaking

Guests gathered on the academy site, between "R" Avenue and the Northwest ESD facility.

Port Perspectives

Ben Franklin once said: "Well done is better than well said," and I certainly agree with his philosophy. In spite of a recession, we are proud to be bringing new tenants and millions of dollars of new construction to Anacortes. First, hats off to our new tenants.

Barrett Financial, Top Cat Engineering, and Nordic Tug LLC are all new tenants at our harbormaster facility, and we thank them for "betting it all" on locating at the Cap Sante Boat Haven. Just to the south of the marina we have another new tenant under construction: the Northwest Career & Technical Academy. Popularly known as the Marine Skills Center, this 28,000 square foot facility will open in September 2010. It will soon be another iconic facility at the Cap Sante Boat Haven, complete with a large community conference room and expanded parking for marina customers and tourists. We are close to having another Northwest icon move to the marina very soon.

The north end of the marina will soon (complete by November '09) sport a new 3.5-ton small boat hoist to begin the transition of this area to be the Anacortes Small Boat Center.

Back at the Port Warehouse (The Old Transit Shed) at the north end of Commercial Avenue we continue to increase bookings of community and private events including the first wedding to be held in the warehouse! Well done IS better than well said!
